Item 1. Reports to Stockholders.

To Our Shareholders:

We are pleased to submit to you our report for the year ended December 31, 2008. The net asset value at that date was $8.45 per common share. The Fund's common stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) and its share price can differ from its net asset value; at year end, the Fund's closing price on the NYSE was $7.35. The total returns, including income, for the Fund and the comparative benchmarks were:

	Six Months Ended December 31, 2008	Year Ended December 31, 2008
Cohen & Steers Total Return Realty Fund at Market
Value ^a	44.77%	37.72%
Cohen & Steers Total Return Realty Fund at Net Asset
Value ^a	30.13%	32.15%
FTSE NAREIT Equity REIT Index ^b	35.41%	37.73%
S&P 500 Index ^b	28.47%	36.99%
Blended benchmark 80% NAREIT Equity REIT Index,
20% Merrill Lynch REIT Preferred Index ^b	30.91%	31.75%

The performance data quoted represent past performance. Past performance is no guarantee of future results. The investment return and the principal value of an investment will fluctuate and shares, if sold, may be worth more or less than their original cost. Current performance may be lower or higher than the performance data quoted.

A quarterly dividend of $0.15 per common share was declared and will be paid to common shareholders on March 31, 2009.^c The Fund may pay distributions in excess of the Fund's investment company taxable income and net realized capital gains. This excess would be a "return of capital" distributed from the Fund's assets. Distributions of capital decrease the Fund's total assets and, therefore, could have the effect of increasing the Fund's expense ratio. In addition, in order to make these distributions, the Fund may have to sell portfolio securities at a less than opportune time.

- ^a As a closed-end investment company, the price of the Fund's New York Stock Exchange-traded shares will be set by market forces and at times may deviate from the net asset value per share of the Fund.
- ^b The FTSE NAREIT Equity REIT Index is an unmanaged, market capitalization weighted index of all publicly traded REITs that invest predominantly in the equity ownership of real estate. The index is designed to reflect the performance of all publicly traded equity REITs as a whole. The S&P 500 Index is an unmanaged index of common stocks that is frequently used as a general measure of stock market performance. The Merrill Lynch REIT Preferred Index is an unmanaged index of real estate preferred securities.
- ^c Please note that distributions paid by the Fund to shareholders are subject to recharacterization for tax purposes. The final tax treatment of these distributions is reported to shareholders after the close of the calendar year.

Investment Review

The year was volatile for equities in the United States and around the world. It began with a sell-off driven by a fresh wave of write-downs from major banks, followed by the hastily arranged sale of Bear Stearns to JPMorgan Chase. The shocks kept coming, picking up speed in September with the U.S. government takeover of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, Lehman Brothers' bankruptcy and the nationalization of insurance giant AIG.

Amid concerns that the entire financial system could be at risk, the U.S. Congress, Treasury secretary and Federal Reserve chairman structured a $700 billion rescue package that has been used to buy preferred shares in banks to bolster capital and encourage lending. The Fed and other central banks dropped interest rates and implemented stimulus packages in a coordinated effort to break the credit freeze and kick-start the global economy.

REITs in line with the broad stock market

Real estate securities had a positive year-to-date return through September, outperforming the broad stock market by a substantial margin before declining in the fourth-quarter sell-off. For the year, they performed in line with the S&P 500 Index. Given a weakening economy and tight credit, the market further downgraded property value estimates although the absence of transactions has made it increasingly difficult to support those estimates. Investors questioned whether real estate companies would be able to refinance maturing debt on favorable terms.

Most property sectors had double-digit declines for the year. REITs with the strongest balance sheets generally outperformed the index, especially in the fourth quarter. The self storage sector (which had a total return of +5.1% for the year) was the only sector to post a gain; it is dominated by Public Storage, a company with a debt-free balance sheet. Health care (12.0%) was cushioned by its perceived defensive nature. The apartment sector (25.1%) also outperformed, due to relatively favorable fundamentals demand for rental property was supported by weakness in the housing and mortgage markets.

The industrial sector (67.5%), which contained certain companies (such as ProLogis) whose business models were more dependent on transactional income, had the poorest performance, as the absence of financing affected their ability to find buyers, and declining cash flows weakened balance sheets. The regional mall sector (60.6%) was hurt by retailer bankruptcy liquidations and moderating consumer spending. The shopping center sector (38.8%), which is more represented by consumer staples retailers, performed in line with the index. The office sector (41.1%) struggled, with particular weakness among companies focused on areas with large financial services industries.

REIT preferreds caught in the downdraft

REIT preferred securities outperformed many investment classes in 2008, including equities, the broader preferred market and even REIT bonds. However, they did not escape the disruption and volatility that characterized global markets. Their decline reflected a rapidly weakening economic environment that led to worsening fundamentals and tighter credit conditions for REITs.

Performance slightly trailed the blended benchmark

The Fund declined in a poor year for real estate securities, although it outperformed the NAREIT benchmark on a net asset value basis. This was due in part to our REIT preferred securities, an allocation designed to mitigate volatility and enhance income. Preferreds, especially those issued by real estate companies, outperformed real estate common stocks in the period. However, the Fund's REIT preferreds trailed the REIT preferred component of the blended benchmark on a total-return basis; our underweight in REIT preferreds, compared with the blended benchmark, also detracted from return.

With respect to REIT common stocks, the primary contributors to relative performance were our stock selection and limited weighting in the industrial sector, based on valuations and our concerns over earnings stability. Stock selection in the shopping center sector also aided relative return, as did our underweight in that sector. Income considerations led us to be overweight in the health care sector. This proved beneficial, although stock selection partly offset the weighting effect.

Factors that hindered relative return included our overweight and stock selection in the office sector; this was in part due to the poor performance of Maguire Properties. The stock was hurt by concerns over the company's debt and its presence in Orange County, California, a market threatened by mortgage-related declines in employment. Stock selection in the regional mall sector also hindered performance, as did our underweight in the self storage sector.

Investment Outlook

We expect to see an average 4% decline in cash flows over the next year (more bearish views on equities in the S&P 500 Index suggest a 12% drop). However, this reflects softening demand, not oversupply, which in some past cycles weighed heavily on real estate companies. Given this outlook for fundamentals, vacancy rates are likely to rise, but not reach the highs seen in previous difficult cycles.

Until banks start lending again, and as long as the windows for unsecured bonds and commercial mortgage-backed securities stay closed, REIT balance sheets will remain under pressure. That said, we believe that the vast majority of these companies are structurally sound, and that they will have sufficient operating capital to navigate 2009 successfully. Some real estate companies may cut dividends to preserve cash and strengthen their balance sheets; others may recapitalize through dilutive equity offerings. At some point, the lending environment will improve as banks reconsider the opportunity costs of holding cash and investing in low-yield securities.

In our view, much pessimism has already been factored into U.S. REIT share prices, which are trading at cash flow multiples at the lower end of the range seen over the past two decades. As investors seek higher income and returns, they may target real estate securities, which had an average dividend yield of 7.6% at the end of the period, compared with 3.2% for the S&P 500 Index and a yield of 2.3% for the 10-year Treasury.

With respect to REIT preferreds, credit spreads and absolute yields are near their highest levels ever. Given the economic backdrop, it is unlikely that they will stage a strong recovery in the near term. However, we expect that they will discount a better outlook well before the recession has passed. They may also continue to react favorably to the aggressive steps many REITs are taking to stabilize their credit fundamentals.

A focus on balance sheets

We favor companies with strong balance sheets and visible, relatively stable earnings. At the same time, we recognize that there are an increasing number of attractive risk-adjusted investment opportunities with companies that have been, in our view, unduly punished in the past year's "flight to safety." We view with interest those companies that have adapted to the current environment and are following through on their strategies. Although some are priced at distressed levels (with stock multiples as low as 2x future cash flows), we believe very few companies will fail, and many will produce outstanding returns in time. To that end, we have increased the number of holdings in the portfolio in order to take advantage of the higher potential total returns these companies offer.
