[Response to Cavalier's Complaint to Virginia's State Corporation Commission]

I just read your coverage of Cavalier's complaint last week on the E911 database issue. You should know that the State Corporation Commission bounced Cavalier's motion last Friday morning, since the company is not a party to the Verizon-MCI merger proceeding.

Cavalier wants to have it both ways — making numerous unsubstantiated statements about the merger between Verizon and MCI and the state of competition in Virginia while not being subject to questioning on those statements.

E911 data has been used in Virginia proceedings [Verizon's long-distance application and, more recently, last year's alternative regulation case], as well as at the FCC and the Department of Justice, in order to measure the extent of facilities-based telecom competition. Verizon and MCI have properly relied on this legal precedent in using E911 data in this case when others — including Cavalier — raised the issue of the extent of competition in Virginia. The only database data used in the case are total line counts, nothing else.

The only reason this data was put before the Commission in the first place was in direct response to the commission staff's request for Virginia-specific data and unsubstantiated claims by Verizon's and MCI's competitors that there was little competition from other companies in the state. As any resident or business knows, that simply is not true. Verizon and MCI therefore relied on past commission precedent to use E911 data, among other information, to demonstrate the full extent of competition in the state.

Using relevant data to answer questions from the Commission Staff and provide information needed for the Commission's deliberations is in no way in violation of Verizon's legal or contractual obligations. None of the data was used for marketing or other retail purposes, which is the contractual restriction. Rather, it was used in Virginia as it has been routinely used by the FCC, the DOJ, numerous other state commissions and, most importantly, the Virginia State Corporation Commission. To repeat: The only database data used in the case are total line counts, nothing else.

It's plainly apparent that our opponents are making silly accusations such as this one in attempts to impede this merger. We believe that the record will show that the merger meets the requirements of the Utilities Transfer Act and should be approved by the commission.

That s our perspective on the issue.
