COHEN & STEERS TOTAL RETURN REALTY FUND, INC.

April 21, 2004

To Our Shareholders:

We are pleased to submit to you our report for the quarter ended March 31, 2004. The net asset value at that date was $18.59 per share. During the quarter, three $0.085 per share monthly dividends were declared and paid.

INVESTMENT REVIEW

For the quarter, Cohen & Steers Total Return Realty Fund had a total return, based on income and change in net asset value, of 10.9%. This compares with the NAREIT Equity REIT Index's(a) total return of 12.0%.

The overall equity market was generally choppy during the first quarter, as the broad market averages showed little change. In contrast, REITs performed well, driven by continued investor appreciation for the potential for REITs to continue to provide current income, lower volatility, competitive total returns, portfolio diversification and, most importantly in our opinion, the improving visibility and breadth of U.S. economic growth. Following the quarter-end, however, bond and stock markets, particularly REITs, had a decidedly negative response to the strong March jobs report. As more fully discussed in the 'Investment Outlook' section below, we believe that this is a temporary correction driven by valuation concerns of some investors and exacerbated by short-term technical factors. We believe that REIT valuations and growth prospects are more attractive now than at any time over the past several months.

Approximately two and a half years into an economic recovery, we believe the impact is being felt broadly across the income-producing property markets in many parts of the United States as demand for space is increasing and rents are stabilizing. In our view, the resultant acceleration in REIT cash flow growth rates is what has been driving stock prices since last year. After a modest earnings decline in 2003, our forecast is for earnings growth to accelerate to mid-single digit growth this year and high single digit growth next year.

The leadership patterns of recent quarters held during the first quarter. The regional mall group, continuing to enjoy the best fundamentals of any property type in our opinion, was the best performing sector with a 22.7% total return. Health care, a more interest rate sensitive sector, benefited from a further decline in interest rates and delivered 16.6%. Shopping centers' continued earnings consistency helped drive them to a 15.5% total return. Apartments, hotels and office lagged with 4.3%, 6.8% and 9.0% total returns, respectively.

(a) The NAREIT Equity REIT Index is an unmanaged, market capitalization weighted index of all publicly traded REITs that invest predominantly in the equity ownership of real estate. The index is designed to reflect the performance of all publicly traded equity REITs as a whole.

COHEN & STEERS TOTAL RETURN REALTY FUND, INC.

The fund's best performing investments during the quarter were in the regional mall (20.6% total return) and health care sectors (18.8%), while the worst performing sector for the fund was the apartment sector, which had a 7.1% total return. Ventas Inc., continuing where it left off from last year, was the fund's best performing stock, contributing a total return of 26.5% during the quarter. Other standouts included Newcastle Investment Corp, Glimcher Realty Trust, Macerich Company and Mills Corp., all of which provided total returns in excess of 20%. Laggards during the quarter were Equity Office Properties, Camden Property Trust and Home Properties, each of which had a total return of less than 3%.

Taking a more thematic approach toward examining the determinants of performance within the REIT sector during the first quarter, we have observed that cash flow growth has been the dominant driver. We found a meaningful correlation between current cash flow growth rate and first quarter stock price performance. In our view, those companies that are facing positive property fundamentals and those that have the ability to deploy capital at attractive yields (whether through acquisitions or redevelopment of existing real estate, or through ground-up development) also tend to have an attractive cost of both equity and debt capital. This has enabled many of these companies to expand their portfolios even more profitably. This activity, of course, often has the potential to result in a very positive effect on growth in both net asset value and earnings.

Not surprisingly, the stock prices of many of the aggressive acquirers of property have appreciated the most during the first quarter. Skeptics may observe that property prices look expensive by historical standards. However, we expect the economic recovery to continue and therefore do not believe that there will be a better buying opportunity a year from now if our forecast for stronger job growth, increased occupancies, and higher rents is realized.

The converse of this has been true for companies on the opposite side of this trend. Companies that have viewed the current pricing of real estate assets as expensive or even somewhat irrational have opted to be net sellers of assets -- de-leveraging and waiting for a better buying opportunity. The practitioners of this strategy have been rewarded with anemic stock price appreciation. The market's judgment appears to be that these companies have foregone an opportunity to boost earnings and create value.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK

As discussed, a very strong March increase in U.S. nonfarm payrolls was announced on April 2, 2004, well in excess of consensus expectations (308,000 new jobs created versus an expectation of 120,000). The bond and stock markets reacted negatively to the news, as did REITs, due to concerns that the Federal Reserve would raise interest rates. REIT stock prices declined in the week following the release of the jobs report as investors took profits from a group of stocks that had appreciated without interruption for the past 14 months. While REITs have demonstrated little correlation with interest rates over longer periods of time, it appears that in the short term, the extreme bond market activity has negatively impacted REITs. The more defensive sectors such as shopping centers and health care underperformed, while the more cyclical sectors such as office and apartments declined less.

COHEN & STEERS TOTAL RETURN REALTY FUND, INC.

We believe that this has been a temporary correction in the REIT market driven by valuation concerns by some investors as well as by short-term technical factors. Ironically, if strong job growth continues in the coming months, as we expect, real estate fundamentals should respond very favorably, especially in the apartment and office sectors where job growth is the single greatest determinant of demand for space.

We continue to maintain a positive outlook for the U.S. economy. At this time, in our opinion, all the pre-conditions for strong job growth are in place. Corporate profits have staged a dramatic recovery and are at an all-time high as a percentage of GDP. Therefore, it is increasingly profitable for firms to hire the next incremental worker. The recently reported declines in weekly initial jobless claims to three-year lows and the spike in the monthly change in nonfarm payrolls to the highest levels in four years have finally begun to demonstrate that this is occurring.

Though not widely understood, we believe that job growth has actually been occurring for some time. Many of the companies that we invest in are on the front lines of the consumer and corporate economy. A number of the office and apartment companies that we speak with have observed improved leasing activity for their portfolios that would contradict the virtually nonexistent rate of job growth implied by the official government statistics until recently. Thus, we believe that a normal cyclical economic recovery is in the process of unfolding. In addition, the supply/demand dynamic in most real estate markets is turning more positive. Many real estate companies are adding value, in our view, by making real estate investments in a profitable and disciplined fashion. As a result of the historically low interest rate environment of the last few years, many REITs were able to improve their balance sheets in a way that gives these companies better potential for an attractive spread between property yields and their blended cost of capital. As a result, our forecast is that cash flow growth rates for REITs should begin to accelerate in 2004 after declining in 2003.

With earnings visibility improving, our forecast is for a resumption of meaningful dividend increases in the next year or two. This is an important factor to consider when assessing how REITs react to rising interest rates. Unlike fixed income securities, REITs have the potential to increase their dividends as the economy expands and companies see their earnings increase, which can help to offset rising rates. During the last economic expansion, for example (the period from 1992 through 2001), REITs increased their dividends on average by about 7% per year.

With the recent pullback, REITs are now back to trading closely in line with their underlying net asset values. As a result, we believe REIT valuations are now more attractive than at any time over the past several months. Thus, while market activity could continue to be choppy over the near term, we believe that REIT fundamentals are poised to continue to improve, which should be positive for dividends and share prices over the intermediate and longer term.

Sincerely,
