Attachment I

Our free cash flow will follow our profit performance, and we continue to see our free cash flow realization in the nineties. So, the operating (non-GAAP) EPS guidance of at least $13.50 would translate to free cash flow in the $11 to $12 billion range in 2016.

=====

On a segment-by-segment basis, GTS has grown in three quarters of the year, with pretty good backlog growth, and we think that trajectory continues to hold. GBS improved in the fourth quarter relative to the third. So sequential improvement in its year-to-year growth rate, but we're not relying on that bouncing back rapidly, as we know we're going through a transition there and we want to get through that transition as rapidly as possible. Having said that, about half of our GBS business now is in strategic imperatives, but half isn't. So we're going to continue that transition.

The systems business will continue to see momentum in the POWER business, where the team has done a tremendous job of repositioning the platform, but the mainframe is coming into the back half of the cycle. So we won't see the same growth levels as we saw.

And in software, that transactional mix will not play as big a role in the first quarter of 2016 as it did in the fourth quarter of 2015, and so we'll see how we transition through the year, but bolstering that software growth will also be some of the acquisitions.

=====

Our software mix within our strategic imperatives is still at about twice as high as the rest of the business. So across services, hardware and software, if you look at the mix of those, the software piece in the strategic imperatives is twice as high as what we see in the rest of the business. Now, it's down a little bit year to year as, in any given year or any given quarter we have a different mix, we have certain programs that roll in. But it remains in total at about twice as high a mix as what we have in our core business.

=====

We would expect that our 2016 operating (non-GAAP) tax rate will be 18% plus or minus a couple of points. This excludes any discrete tax items over the course of the year.
